Liz Shreeve is No. 1 of 10 artists in residence at Culture at Work connecting art and science in 2014

Do numbers drive the cosmos?

Liz Shreeve's work explores this question using three dimensional geometric forms as the starting point for creating paper sculptures of surprising beauty, complexity and strength. The pieces are constructed from hundreds or thousands of the same small geometric paper units arranged in a preordained sequence. The organic structure of the work emerges from following the sequence. The rules of nature, of growth and differentiation can be recognised in the way the sculptures evolve. Just as in nature, beauty and complexity arise from simplicity. Liz has been working as a professional artist since graduating from the National Art School in 2005. Her practice is based on non-objective principles of colour, contrast, tone, shadow and light. She uses simple repeated units in paper and wood to create ordered relief works and three dimensional forms which catch light, slow perception and make the act of seeing more conscious.' Liz Shreeve Residency Dates 21 April - 30 August 2014
